

What Does It Mean to Read Like a Writer?

(Excerpts From: Mike Bunn. "How to Read Like a Writer" Writing Spaces: Readings on Writing, Volume 2 © 2011)

Why Learn to Read Like a Writer?

[In a writing class, you are reading to learn about writing.] When you Read Like a Writer you work to identify some of the choices the author made so that you can better understand how such choices might arise in your own writing. The idea is to carefully examine the things you read, looking at the writerly techniques in the text in order to decide if you might want to adopt similar (or the same) techniques in your writing.

...To better understand the ideas in the writing (which you will automatically do to some degree anyway), you are trying to understand how the piece of writing was put together by the author and what you can learn about writing by reading a particular text.

As you read in this way, you think about how the choices the author made and the techniques that they used are influencing your own responses as a reader. What is it about the way this text is written that makes you feel and respond the way you do?

The goal as you read like a writer is to locate what you believe are the most important writerly choices represented in the text—choices as large as the overall structure, or as small as a single word used only once—to consider the effect of those choices on potential readers (including yourself). Then you can go one step further and imagine what different choices the author might have made instead, and what effect those different choices would have on readers.

What are questions you can ask before you start reading?

- Do you know the author's purpose for this piece of writing?
- Do you know who the intended audience is for this piece of writing?
- In what genre is this written?
- Is this a published or a student-produced piece of writing?
- Is this the kind of writing you will be assigned to write yourself?

What Are Questions to Ask As You Are Reading?

- What is the author's purpose for this piece of writing?
- Who is the intended audience?
- How effective is the language the author uses? Is it too formal? Too informal? Perfectly appropriate?
- What kinds of evidence does the author use to support his/her claims? Does he/she use statistics? Quotes from famous people? Personal anecdotes or personal stories? Does he/she cite books or articles?
- How appropriate or effective is this evidence? Would a different type of evidence, or some combination of evidence, be more effective?
- Are there places in the writing that you find confusing? What about the writing in those places makes it unclear or confusing?
- How does the author move from one idea to another in the writing? Are the transitions between the ideas effective? How else might he/she have transitioned between ideas instead?

The most common suggestion made by former students—mentioned by every single one of them— [print the text] ...mark up the text, make comments in the margins, and write yourself notes and summaries both during and after reading. Often the notes students took while reading became ideas or material for the students to use in their own papers. It's important to read with a pen or highlighter in your hand so that you can mark—right on the text—all those spots where you identify an interesting choice the author has made or a writerly technique you might want to use. One thing that I like to do is to highlight and underline the passage in the text itself, and then try to answer the following three questions on my notepad:

- What is the technique the author is using here?
- Is this technique effective?
- What would be the advantages and disadvantages if I tried this same technique in my writing?
